Jennifer Bol

Jennifer Bol is a consultant in Spencer Stuart's New York office and leads the firm's Education, Nonprofit & Public Policy Practice. With her background in strategy consulting and financial services, Jennifer has worked extensively with forward-looking clients in the education and nonprofit sectors, helping them identify and recruit both traditional and non-traditional candidates to key leadership positions. Some of her recently completed searches include the presidents of Atlantic Philanthropies, the Conference Board and Wesleyan University.

Jennifer brings a strong background in management consulting and financial services to her position. Prior to joining Spencer Stuart, she was a partner with another leading international executive search firm. Before moving to search, Jennifer spent several years as senior vice president of operations, planning and analysis at Young & Rubicam Inc. and at Bankers Trust as head of the corporate development group and a vice president in the management consulting group. She also has significant experience as a strategy consultant, serving as head of the New York office for Gemini Consulting, formerly known as the MAC Group.

Jennifer graduated from Smith College with a degree in government and economics and received her master's degree in public and private management from Yale University.
